MY BEST JOB

by Emma Nash

My best job was driving the city bus. I drove for thirteen years. I really enjoyed working with the public. It was hard, but still enjoyable.

Driving wasn't hard, but getting up so early was. Sometimes I would have to be at work at three fifteen, four and five o'clock a.m. It was nice getting off early. I had time to take care of my business and doctors appointments. the salary was very good. I was able to raise six children, put them through school and give them a good childhood.

Now I no longer work driving. I had to retire. The children are grown with their own children.

I am a grandmother and even a great grandmother.

My Worst Job

by Whakesha Churchville

I can recall working for Honey Baked Ham in early November 2009. This place smelled great. People who shared employment with me were warm and friendly. We had to work something called a kiosk at Pick N Save stores.

Time went by and I enjoyed the job until one day in December I came in and the Kiosk boss requested that I leave. I didn't understand why. To top it all, he made me work all day before he did this. He stated that my co-worker had complained about my job performance and other garbage. She was younger than I am. I mean I could have been her mother, but I just let it go, kept my peace, and let god fight my battle; so to you people who went through this, keep the peace 'cause there is always a better way out there.
