About the Byrne Criminal Justice Innovation Grant: The Byrne Criminal Justice Innovation (BCJI) Program brings together diverse partners including local law enforcement, researchers and residents to analyze crime drivers and pursue strategies that reduce crime, spur revitalization and build community-police collaboration. More on Amani BCJI at <http://www.lisc.org/our-initiatives/safe-neighborhoods/bcji/what-bcji/>.

Administered by the Department of Justice Bureau of Justice Assistance, BCJI is part of the “Smart Suite” of programs that support partnerships between researchers and practitioners to develop data-driven and evidence-informed strategies. It is also a signature program within the White House Promise Zones Initiative, which builds on federal partnerships to help neighborhoods of concentrated poverty remake themselves into places of choice and opportunity.

About the Habitat for Humanity Project: In April 2013, Milwaukee Habitat launched a neighborhood revitalization strategy in the Washington Park neighborhood on Milwaukee’s west side. The project is clustering Habitat families, new and rehabbed homes, and home repair projects in a single neighborhood, in an effort to increase property values, decrease crime, and build a strong network of homeowners. Currently, there are over 200 families that own Habitat houses in the neighborhood. When deciding where to build and rehab homes in the Washington Park neighborhood, Habitat consults with both the Milwaukee Police Department (MPD) and Milwaukee District Attorney’s (DA) office. Habitat selects properties to build on or rehab, followed by a law enforcement review of the plans and parcel by parcel analysis. Law enforcement then removes negative influences through arrests and by alerting landlords of drug and other illegal activity. As a result, crime has declined. There has been a 27% reduction in violent crime in the neighborhood since 2013 and 30% reduction in violent crime on the blocks were Habitat implemented housing projects.

About the Dominican Center: For more than 20 years the Dominican Center has partnered with neighborhood residents of Amani, to increase access to quality education, housing and employment. The Dominican Center was designated the lead community anchor for the Building Neighborhood Capacity Program (BNCP) in Amani in 2012. BNCP is part of the federal initiative to address poverty and underlying critical and interlocking issues of education, employment, housing, health and safety in distressed neighborhoods; and design and implement a resident-led revitalization plan. Through this initiative, the Dominican Center facilitated a resident-led neighborhood revitalization effort resulting in the formation of a resident group, Amani United. Amani United created block advocate groups, conducted neighborhood cleanups, held anti-violence vigils, vacant lot events, beautification efforts, and the rebirth of Moody Park. 500 people celebrated the grand opening of Moody Park in August 2015 and over 700 Amani residents have participated in activities over the past year. The target area has had a 21.6% decrease in crime compared to a 13.2% decrease citywide for the period of 2012-2015.
